Moringa

Although the moringa tree is native from India, it is also in some parts of Africa and Asia. The trees grow in the wild and are also cultivated.

The moringa tree is well known for its medicinal properties. It is one of the most useful tree in the world, as almost all of its parts can be used to nourish or heal.

Moringa oil contains a lot of unsaturated fatty acids especially oleic acid. This mono unsaturated acid gives the oil a great stability. It also contains many vitamins (A, B, C, E) and minerals (zinc, potassium, selenium).

There are two seasons to harvest moringa seeds: from January to March and from August to October.

The pods reach maturity and are harvested as they dry on the tree. The pods are harvested from the tree and the seeds are removed to be dried in the sun.

From Burundi

The moringa oil we offer comes from the Imbo and Moso regions. These are the two regions in Burundi at an altitude of 700-800 meters where the moringa tree can grow.

Our producer works either with local farmers' cooperatives and buys their crops from them on wild trees or planted between their crops, or on his own land on which he has planted nearly 33,000 trees under strict environmental conditions.

It allows more than a hundred people, in permanent or seasonal employment, to live and support their families.

The process

Moringa oil is an oil pressed from moringa seeds. The seeds are carefully manually selected to guarantee the best oil quality. The oil is light yellow in color and has a rather neutral taste.

For a good quality oil, the seeds are cold pressed and then filtered. The temperature should be kept as low as possible to prevent the biologically active substances from becoming ineffective.

After a rest period of 8 days, a small deposit appears on the bottom. After separating the deposit, the oil is filtered a second time under pressure to obtain a beautiful, pure oil of very high quality.

It is recommended to store the oil at room temperature and away from light. The oil may solidify or form crystals if kept in a cool place. If this happens, simply allow the oil to warm up slowly. For example, near a heat source. The oil will then return to its normal liquid form without affecting its quality.

Our shared values

Our producers are a Belgo-Burundian couple and live in the two countries during the year.

Both of them wanted to develop actions to support the local population. They created a home and took in 12 children and 6 students whom they house, feed and educate.

Since 2020, they have set up a moringa oil manufacturing plant. They have been able to hire 7 people, some of whom are from the home.

Burundi is one of the poorest countries in the world, many men leave to look for work in Tanzania. Thanks to this activity and the creation of jobs, our producer reduces the risk of women and children being left alone. This contributes to the reduction of poverty and the improvement of access to education and health care.
